Boston: Where to watch the 2015 Women's World Cup

Soccer. The U.S. women's team has a good shot at winning the World Cup.

Hey, footie fans! We know it's really hard to divert your attention from the ongoing scandal embroiling FIFA.

But guess what? There are actual games being played. Right now! By some of the best athletes in the sport.

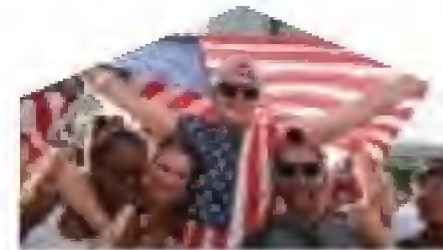

It's the FIFA Women's World Cup. Sure, the prize money is a fraction — about 2 percent — of that offered to men but, hey, at least it's soccer.

And with 24 teams in the tournament, this year is the biggest yet. And unlike the men's world cup, the U.S. team has a chance of winning this thing. The action kicked off over the weekend with host country Canada besting China and Netherlands beating New Zealand.

On Monday, the U.S. team has its first game of the tournament when it plays Australia at 7:30 p.m. ET.

Deliberations. Jurors weigh sanity question in Alemany murder trial

There is no question that Edwin Alemany stabbed and killed Amy Lord, his lawyer told a Suffolk County Court jury in his closing arguments.

Defense attorney Jeffery Denner petitioned the jury to acknowledge the admission of guilt and see these crimes as the behavior of a mentally ill man who has been in and out of psychiatric hospitals and on antipsychotic medication for years.

"We have conceded guilt," Denner told the jury on Friday, according to the Boston Globe. "[But] he's sick. You know he's sick."

The defense is asking for a not-guilty verdict by reason of insanity in light of Alemany's tormented past.

Alemany, 30, is alleged to have attacked Lord on Dorchester Street as she headed to a gym at 6 a.m. on July 23, 2013, dragging the 24-year-old Wilbraham resident back to her apartment where he continued to beat her before forcing her into her car to withdraw money from five ATMs.

At 8:40 that morning, Lord's Jeep Cherokee was found set ablaze in Southie.

Alemany, 30, is charged with first-degree murder, kidnapping, armed carjacking, arson and several counts of robbery in connection with the 2013 homicide.

A psychiatrist hired by the defense told the court that Alemany hears the voice of a man telling him he is worthless, along with other psychotic conditions including severe depression, identity disorders and alcoholism.

The jury will now have to decide whether Alemany is capable of comprehending right and wrong. Prosecutors must be able to show that Alemany was able to distinguish the difference.

"Mr. Alemany knew exactly what he was doing," Suffolk Assistant District Attorney John Pappas said, the Globe reported. "This man acted with purpose and with clarity of mind."

The jury will resume deliberations today. NATE HOMAN

Broken Bat. Fan struck by flying fragment at Fenway expected to live

The woman who was struck by a broken bat at Fenway Park is expected to survive her nightmarish, life-threatening injuries sustained during the second inning of Friday's game between the Red Sox and the Oakland Athletics.

Tonya Carpenter was hit in the head when Oakland's Brett Lawrie's broken bat rocketed into the stands between the backstop and the away team's dugout on the third base side. Horrified fans screamed as the bat fragment smashed into the woman, who was seated next to her 8-year-old son.

A Boston police officer consoled the child and carried him out of the stadium.

The impact caused a bloody mess, but fans jumped in quickly to help her. One man used his shirt to put pressure on the wound; others used scarves as tourniquets.

She was placed on a stretcher and taken to Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center. "Our thoughts and concern and certainly our prayers go out to the woman who was struck with the bat, her and her family," Red Sox manager John Farrell said, according to the Boston Globe. "All you can think about is a family coming to a ballgame to hopefully get three hours of enjoyment and unfortunately with how close our stands are to the field of action. An accident like this tonight, it's certainly disturbing."

Carpenter remains in serious but stable condition. Both the A's and the Sox observed a moment of silence during Saturday's game. Red Sox designated hitter and fan-favorite David Ortiz told the Boston Globe that he tells fans to be careful whenever they sit close to the field.

"I'm always telling them, 'Watch the game, watch the game,' because anything can happen, especially when you're that close," Ortiz said. "There's no net and what happened [Friday] night, I've been playing this game a long time and I don't ever remember seeing somebody get injured that bad." NATE HUMAN

Three things to know

China cruise ship death toll exceeds 400

Chinese officials, rescuers and family members gathered in mourning on Sunday for those lost on a cruise ship that capsized during a storm in the Yangtze River, as the death toll from the disaster reached 431.

Only 14 survivors, one of them the captain, have been found after the ship carrying 456 overturned in a freak tornado on Monday night in Jianli in Hubei province. Most of the passengers were elderly tourists.

The four-story ship was righted and raised on Friday, allowing rescuers on to it to clear away debris, break down cabin doors and look for bodies. The river is being swept to as far away as Shanghai looking for the missing.

Government spokesman Hu Kaihong told reporters that DNA tests were being carried out to identify the bodies.

Sunday marks seven days since the Eastern Star went down, and according to Chinese tradition this is a key date on which to mourn the dead. REUTERS

Data breaches offer treasure trove for hackers

A massive breach of U.S. federal computer networks disclosed this week is the latest in a flood of attacks by suspected Chinese hackers aimed at grabbing personal data, industrial secrets and weapons plans from government and private computers.

The Obama administration disclosed the breach of computer systems at the Office of Personnel Management and said the records of up to 4 million current and former federal employees may have been compromised.

U.S. officials have said on condition of anonymity that they believe the hackers are based in China, but Washington has not publicly blamed Beijing at a time when tensions are high. REUTERS

G7 leaders urge tough line on Russia

Leaders from the Group of Seven industrial nations backed a tough line toward Moscow at the start of a summit in the Bavarian Alps, with U.S. President Barack Obama urging them to stand up to Russian aggression in Ukraine.

Host Angela Merkel greeted Obama in the idyllic Alpine village of Kruen under blue skies, surrounded by locals in traditional dress, drinking beer and eating white sausage and pretzels. REUTERS

Keira Knightley had a girl

Erstwhile "Pirates of the Caribbean" star Keira Knightley became a mom last month for the first time, welcoming a baby with rock star husband James Righton. And while the new parents have been keeping quiet since then, reports are coming out now claiming that they had a baby girl — which is great news for Knightley, who previously talked about finding the prospect of having a son to be "terrifying," to put it mildly.

KNIGHTLEY DODGED A BULLET.

"Somebody said to me the other day, the problem with boys is — sorry, this is horrible — but when you're changing their nappies, you can get the wee in your face," she told Ellen DeGeneres back in February. "And apparently they roll as well, so you have to try to stop them while you're trying to grab something else in order to stop them peeing in your face. So that sounds quite interesting." That's one way to put it.

Oh snap! Diplo and Zedd in EDM smack-talk throw-down!

Apparently male EDM superstar DJs are perfectly capable of being gossipy little sass-buckets. Oh, sorry, we're supposed to be calling them "producers." Anyway, Diplo — whom you may remember from allegedly dating Katy Perry just long enough to make John Mayer jealous — has some thoughts apparently about the love life of twink-y elf prince Zedd. "I'm actually not enemies with Zedd by any means. I just think that he came from such a cool place, and now he's been pegged as a moneymaker for a major label to do EDM, which to me isn't even a genre." Diplo tells Radio.com. "They've marketed him, even the fake relationship with Selena Gomez, all the things to sell records took away from the music." Yeah, man, how dare you try to make laptop-fueled club music for Las Vegas bachelorette parties about making money? And seriously, Ms. Gomez, how many fake relationships can one girl have?

Amber Rose wrote a book?

Amber Rose is releasing a self-help book this fall called "How to Be a Bad Bitch," because this is the world we live in now. And to drum up excitement for what's sure to be a best-seller, Rose posted the cover to Instagram. And it is a doozy:

A nearly naked, gold-tinted Rose stands upon a rocky shore with a bow and arrow, a slain golden man laying at her feet. I didn't realize how much of her success was down to a love for Tarsen's ridiculous "Immortals" film, but there you go.

Watch your back, Tony Robbins.

Prince Harry has been knighted

That's Sir Prince Harry to you, buddy. The spare heir received a new honor from grandma Queen Elizabeth II this weekend, having the title Knight Commander of the Royal Victorian Order bestowed upon him in a private ceremony at Buckingham Palace. Now, I'm not claiming there's any nepotism at work here, but it does seem a little suspicious. Also, I can't hear terms like "Knight Commander" anymore without immediately thinking of "Game of Thrones," so I can only imagine there's a lot of nudity and violence in Harry's future.

Appearing knightly.

Daily video

Songify Shia LaBeouf? Yes.

Did you think there was no way to make Shia LaBeouf's bizarre inspirational rant any more ridiculous? Well, you were very, very wrong. Adorable Internet prankster Schmoeyoho (of "Autotune the News" fame) turned the unhinged actor's work into an epic pop ditty music video, complete with Stonehenge imagery and some Zen-worthy non sequiturs. Sure, there have been lots of adaptations of LaBeouf's green-screen tirade, but this one is the best. And it's surprisingly catchy.

Awards. Broadway went with lower-wattage co-hosts for this year's Tonys.

This might have been the highest-grossing year for Broadway. But despite having two hosts take on the Tony Awards at Radio City Music Hall, or perhaps because of them, it actually felt like a smaller awards show than usual. Neither Kristin Chenoweth nor Alan Cumming were able to shine the way that former hosts like Neil Patrick Harris and Hugh Jackman usually do. Why two hosts, anyway? They explained that it was such a big year that it "requires a man and a woman" (Cumming: "I can relate").

In that vein, the duo stuck to mild banter, mocking each other's shows: "This is the last time I'll sing this," Cumming said about the opening strains of "Willkommen" from "Cabaret," while Chenoweth flatly stated "shut up" when her partner tried to make a joke about the lasting "popularity" of "Wicked." They quickly stepped aside for the opening number, which was "A Musical" from "Something Rotten." Unusually, neither host participated in the song and dance. In addition to hosting, Chenoweth was nominated for her leading role in a musical for "On the Twentieth Century," which also brought her to the stage last night to perform.

It also felt like a quiet year because there were no upsets, which isn't necessarily a bad thing. Front-runner and fan favorite "Fun Home" had already taken away three wins, out of a leading 12 nominations, as of press time.

Major awards included Best Actress in a Leading Role in a Play (Helen Mirren, "The Audience"); Best Original Score

(Jeanine Tesori and Lisa Kron, "Fun Home"); Best Actor in a Featured Role in a Play (Richard McCabe, "The Audience"); Best Book for a Musical (Lisa Kron, "Fun Home"); Best Actor in a Featured Role in a Musical (Christian Borle, "Something Rotten"); Best Actress in a Featured Role in a Musical (Annaleigh Ashford, "You Can't Take It With You"); and Best Direction of a Musical (Sam Gold, "Fun Home").

Aside from "Something Rotten" and "On the Twentieth Century," performances for the evening included numbers from "The King and I," "On the Town" and "Gigi." The most highly anticipated is the intimate and emotional solo "Ring of Keys," from "Fun Home," starring 11-year-old Sydney Lucas, who was herself nominated for Best Actress in a Featured Role in a Musical.

Sometimes online relationships can pay off IRL. "I have this guy who is based in New Zealand who I engaged with quite often over the past six years on Twitter," says Licht. How to land a job through Twitter

DKNY PR Girl gives her tips on rocking social media.

RAQUELLANERI
@RaquellLaner
raquell.laner@metr.us

Can Twitter or Instagram help you land your dream job? According to Aliza Licht, senior vice president of global communications for Donna Karan, it can not only help, it can make — or break — your career (seriously, don't complain about your job on social, people).

Licht should know. She is the superstar force behind DKNY PR Girl, the online personality who reinvented social media for fashion brands, businesses and the people who want to work for them. To her, Twitter may be the world's "biggest cocktail party," but it's no joke.

"Social is like your online résumé," Licht says. "Employers are checking it before they even meet you for an interview, and it's a great way to pave the road for yourself."

So how to make sure your social media presence exudes personality while maintaining professionalism and poise? We asked Licht — who has just written a killer career-advice book, "Leave Your Mark: Land Your Dream Job. Kill It in Your Career. Rock Social Media." — for her tips.

Have a polished profile pic

Real talk: No one wants to hire an egg. (That's the default Twitter profile image.) "Your picture should reflect whatever it is that you want people to think about you," says Licht, "and if you're an egg on Twitter ... that's not exactly putting your best foot forward." Licht's recommendation? A professional-looking portrait. "It's really important for people who want to move up the ladder to have that headshot at the ready," she says. "Why not use it for social media, too? It makes you appear established, even if you're not."

Follow your industry's superstars

Before you start firing your 140-character missiles, you'll want to do your research. "Think about your goal — is it to launch a new business or project [or] is it to get a job? — and then follow people who do what you want to do or who work where you want to work," advises Licht. "I started my @LEAVEYOUR-MARKxo Twitter handle way before the book came out, so I could follow book reviewers and editors and educate myself on the publishing world. You learn so much by observing."

Experiment

Even if you have a clear idea of what you want to get out of social media, nailing the right voice can be tricky. But, even after studying the habits of other social media superstars, the only way you'll really learn how to tweet (or 'gram or "tumble") is by doing it. "You'll start to see, 'Oh, they really like when I talk about X,' or, 'When I posted about Y, it was like a tumbleweed going by,'" Licht says. "You'll start to see what people are interested in and give them more of what they want."

Don't be shy

"The great thing about Twitter is you can speak to anyone — there is no hierarchy," says Licht. So, why not reach out to or engage with your heroes and dream employers? "It's not necessarily about contacting them every day, but once in a while, you can retweet something, compliment something. Make your presence known, but in a way that isn't like stalking."

Letters to the editor

Don't glorify dishonorable occupations

Re: 'Five things you didn't know about male escorts' (Metro.us) With all the honorable professions out there, your paper could find no other way of living to spotlight than that of an "escort?" You then proceed to glorify the profession by quoting a prostitute named "Drilla," who boasts he makes $300 an hour and meets celebrities. Really? Really? As an educator for over 25 years who devotes his life to teaching young people that they need to do something positive with their life that contributes something to society, your article was offensive.

It was a slap in the face to every hard-working parent and educator who works to teach our children that the lifestyle your paper glorified is NOT the way to make a living.

What will it be next? Interviewing crack dealers who boast of making $1,000 per day? Shame on you.

SEAN NORIEGA, VIA EMAIL

Fly your flag on the 14th

The American flag was originally adopted in a resolution by the Continental Congress on June 14, 1777. Flag Day wasn't official recognized until proposed by Congress and signed into law by President Harry Truman in 1949. I therefore urge that the American flag be displayed outside homes, apartments, offices, businesses and stores throughout the U.S. We do this to honor all that our great nation represents, which is freedom, equality and justice for all. We should do this also to show honor and respect for all our brave men and women who are serving our nation today. And also for all those over the years who gave their lives to preserve our cherished freedoms. By flying the flag we are reminded that we can prevail against all adversity. So please fly the American flag on June 14.

3 U.S. players to watch

World Cup. The Americans again have plenty of star power.

In the previous six Women's World Cups, the U.S. has never finished worse than third place. However, the Americans — champions in 1991 and 1999 — have yet to win one this century. Brandi Chastain, in her iconic sports bra, isn't walking through that door. This summer in Canada appears to be the perfect time to end that drought, however, as the United States looks to avenge its heartbreaking loss in penalty kicks to Japan in the 2011 Final.

Note that this is the first time that the field has expanded to include 24 countries. The U.S. is in Group D: It'll open with Australia on Monday in Winnipeg (7:30 p.m., Fox Sports 1), then it plays Sweden on Friday (8 p.m., Fox) in Winnipeg and closes out group play with Nigeria a week from Tuesday (8 p.m., Fox) in Vancouver. Here are three U.S. players to keep close tabs on:

1 Goalkeeper Hope Solo For all of the well-chronicled chaos in her life off the field, Solo is still at the top of her game when she's in net. She is tall (5 feet 9 inches), extremely athletic and capable of many saves that are rarely seen in women's soccer. A key for her will be maintaining focus in each match since the U.S. typically dominates possession and doesn't give up too many scoring chances of its own. Let's just hope that her toxic husband Jeramy Stevens (a former NFL tight end) doesn't make the trip to Canada. This is Solo's third World Cup.

2 Midfielder Megan Rapinoe The U.S. is loaded at midfield: Lauren Holiday (wife of New Orleans Pelicans guard Jrue Holiday), Tobin Heath and Carli Lloyd are all excellent and capable of being stars in this tournament. But Megan Rapinoe is the best pure goal scorer of the bunch. She was one of the breakout stars for the U.S. at the last World Cup (1 goal, 3 assists): She had the cross that Abby Wambach headed in for the famous tying goal against Brazil in the final seconds of their memorable quarterfinal match (eventually won by the U.S. in penalty kicks). Rapinoe is outstanding at free kicks as well, so she should be taking many of those for the U.S. in addition to the corner kicks.

3 Forward Abby Wambach This is the fourth and likely final World Cup (she turned 35 on Tuesday) for the all-time leading goal scorer (182) in the history of women's soccer. Wambach is huge (5 feet 11 inches) and nearly impossible to defend, especially in the air. She is still so dominant, but the one thing that has eluded her in an otherwise legendary career is a World Cup title.

World Cup

U.S. opens up with Australia

History has shown that if you can get two wins (out of the three games) in group play, you are basically guaranteed to reach the knockout round in the World Cup. The U.S. women's national team begins its latest journey in Canada on Monday (7:30, p.m., FOX Sports 1) against Australia at Winnipeg Stadium. The other two countries in Group D kick off earlier that afternoon as Sweden meets Nigeria. Australia is no pushover by any means, as it is ranked No. 10 in the latest FIFA world rankings, while the U.S. is No. 2.

With the expansion to 24 teams in this World Cup, the top two teams in each group advance to the knockout stage, along with the four best third-place squads. Australia is making its fifth appearance out of seven Women's World Cups. The U.S. only beat Australia by a score of 2-1 on Sept.

U.S. midfielder Tobin Heath. GETTY IMAGES

16, 2012, but their two most recent matchups — a 6-2 U.S. win three days after that and a 4-0 shutout of Australia on Oct. 20, 2013 (all played on U.S. soil) — makes you realize why the U.S. is so heavily favored.

Australian goalkeeper Melissa Hudson is playing in her fourth World Cup, while forward Larissa Crummer is the youngest player on the team (19). Midfielder Emily van Egmond was recently named the W-League Player of the Year. RICH SLATE

Game 3

Tampa, Chicago back in action

The Stanley Cup Finals continue Monday at 8 p.m. on NBCSN as the tied series (3-1) shifts to the Midwest in Chicago. The Lightning won Game 2 in Florida by a score of 4-3 Saturday, but a Game 1 victory by the Blackhawks gives them home-ice advantage if they win their games at the United Center. The second game, likely due to its position after the highly rated Belmont Stakes, was NBC's best Stanley Cup Final Game 2 rating since getting the rights in 2005-06.

Offensive woes

Red Sox veterans are not producing

Where do the Red Sox' problems lie?

Well, lots of places, but when narrowing it down it comes back to one thing: The veterans not performing.

It starts with Hanley Ramirez and Pablo Sandoval, the two players the Red Sox organization invested the most into this offseason, with both players' contracts totaling $183 million.

The pair have been a mess at the plate since April and it's been a struggle defensively, especially for Ramirez in left field, who has had issues all season. For Sandoval his issues have come of late, but his errors at third base cost the Red Sox two games last week — Sunday at Texas and Thursday at home against the Twins.

David Ortiz has also been a major disappointment, as going into play Saturday he was batting just .220 with 19 RBI. His biggest issue at the plate seems to be he isn't using all fields like he does when he's at his best, especially with the Green Monster in left field at Fenway Park. The Red Sox need his production, as they are 5-1 when he hits a home run this season.

Another disappointment has been first baseman Mike Napoli. In a contract year, many expected a big season from Napoli, but he's had a rough go of it at the plate. It wasn't until just under two weeks ago that he got his batting average above .200 for the first time all season.

The only veteran on the team who has been performing well is Dustin Pedroia, who at times has needed to will the team to get up for games, his passion for the game very apparent.

The Red Sox couldn't have asked for much more from their younger players, as Xander Bogaerts, Mookie Betts (although he's also had his struggles of late) and Blake Swihart have all performed quite well.

Bogaerts especially has looked more confident than ever both at shortstop and at the plate. In his second full season in the majors he's taking much more control in the field and swinging a hot bat.

Betts has had some tough luck, with a lot of hard-hit balls hit right at defenders, but overall the organization couldn't have asked for much more. And the same goes for Swihart since coming up in mid-May after Ryan Hanigan went down with a broken finger, especially with how he's handled the staff being thrown into the fire.

Because of such a weak AL East division, even with their record the Red Sox are far from out of anything, but they need to change their ways soon. And it all starts with the veterans, the guys the organization has put the most money into, who need to start earning their paychecks, because right now it's been a major failure.
